

After two visits from the Care Quality Commission in the Autumn time, a report published by the organisation in December revealed that both the Supported Living service, that supports individuals with learning disabilities or mental health needs to live independently, and Flaxpits House, a shared home for younger people with learning disabilities, both received an amazing 'Outstanding' rating from the Care Quality Commission.

Supported Living were commended for their approach to supporting individuals' needs, promoting choice and listening to their aspirations, whilst Flaxpits House were highlighted for treating residents with "kindness and compassion" and for taking creative steps to promote positive relationships.

We'd like to say a massive congratulations to all staff involved - the 'Outstanding' ratings are a true testament to their hard work and commitment to supporting our service users in a person-centred way.

To read the CQC reports in full, please click here for Supported Living, and here for Flaxpits House.